Ahead in these was the Canton of Aargau with about 70% of rejecting votes – the Canton which already has more nuclear power stations than any other, i. e. three. The Confederation follows an energy policy which aims at reducing energy consumption and is against all waste, without, however, too much State intervention. An acceptance of the Initiatives would have led to a shortage of electricity and consequently to considerable interference by the State.

Citizenship Campaign

In the March 1984 issue of this periodical, you were informed of the result of the plebiscite on 4th December 1983, which anchored in the Federal Constitution the transmission of Swiss nationality by Swiss mothers. At the Assembly in May, I explained the general procedure which enables this principle to come into force. Following the deliberations of its Commission, the National Council considered this matter on 17th September, although initially it should have been treated already in the June session.

It was a long meeting, and it was only the «Nationale Aktion» which made systematic opposition, proposing amendments to each article, and that meant a session of fully four hours until the matter was completed.

There is no need to enter into the discussion in detail, all the more as all the demands of our Organization were agreed, specially regarding the retrospective possibility of attaining Swiss citizenship where the limit was extended to the age of 30, although the Federal Council had proposed the limit at 22. By this, all those who suffered discrimination by the regulations issued in 1978, will now be able to benefit from this revision.

The press has commented most favourably on the decision by the National Council, and headings like the following could be read: «Un geste pour les mères», «Une petite générosité», «Un pas vers l'égalité entre les sexes», «Contre la discrimination de la mère suisse».

The Council of States, too, had this matter on its agenda for the autumn. It should have dealt with it on 27th September. But due to an overloaded program, it decided to put it off to the March session. The Council has declared its intention to study the matter in depth following the debate in the National Council, and to consider the various aspects. The result of this postponement, though not very grave, will be that the change in the law will not now come into force on 1st January 1985, but only half way through the year.

It is hoped that the Council of States will follow the National Council in every point, which would mean full success for our nationality campaign. In any case, we are on the right path so far.

The press did not like this postponement by the Council of States; the headings speak for themselves: «Les femmes attendront», «Débat reporté», «Occasion manquée», «Report pour le droit de cité».

To summarize we may say that we are nearing the end of our efforts in favour of the Swiss mothers and their children. Nevertheless we cannot consider the whole matter of citizenship closed as yet. A further revision will have to be undertaken in order to enable the foreign husband to attain Swiss nationality. This will mean a great many problems to be solved.

Speed limits in Switzerland

For some months, lively debates have taken place in Switzerland regarding speed limits: last February, the Federal Office for Ecology proposed a speed limit for roads and motorways in the belief that this would contribute to the reduction of air pollution considered by many as one of the main reasons for the death of trees.

In September, the Federal Council decided as follows: From January 1985, the following speed limits become operational:

- Maximum 80km/h on overland roads (100km/h up to now)
- Maximum 120km/h on motorways (so far 130km/h).

These measures are limited to three years. A reduction in nitrous oxide exhaust of 9000 tons a year, i. e. 5%, is expected.

Federal Councillor Alphons Egli and the Departement of the Interior had originally proposed a speed limit of 100km/h on motorways.

Therefore, we shall have neither 100 nor 130km/h in future, but a truly helvetic compromise!

these Bernese cheese-makers, and they adapted themselves to the new living conditions in the new country.

In many families, Swiss customs and traditions have been observed and passed on. Other cheese-makers and their daughters adapted themselves – through marriage for instance – to the life and traditions of Russian families and lost their ties with the homeland partly or wholly.

Some of their descendants still today operate cheese-making centres and dairies. The majority, however, has discarded the familiar traditions and integrated in the Russian society of today with different occupations. So, for instance, Ivan Aleksandrovic Witwer (a grandson of the cheese-maker Johannes Wittwer, born 1821) who is Professor of History at Moscow University and was awarded the Stalin Prize.
