Laugh a little . . .

A Gruesome Story: In San Francisco the latest jet plane takes off, destination Paris. Soon New York is left behind and the machine is over the Atlantic. A voice is heard over the intercom. system: "Ladies and gentlemen, mesdames et messieurs, here speaks Commander Jackson. I wish you a good flight. Your flying speed is about 6000 miles per hour and altitude about 40,000 feet. The machine is remote-controlled from San Francisco, where I am. You are therefore on board on your own. However, be not alarmed as nothing will . . . nothing will . . . nothing will . . ."

A man comes into the station master's office and says: "You must forbid the 11.30 express train blowing its whistle when it comes through our station."

"That I cannot do," says the station master. "But why do you ask for this?"

"I will tell you why. Our minister always preaches until he hears the train whistle. Last Sunday the darned train was half an hour late!"
