Javnost—The Public, an interdisciplinary journal in social sciences emerges from a need to address problems of the public sphere on an international and interdisciplinary level, to stimulate the development of theory and research in the field, and to help understand and bridge the differences between different cultures. Its contributors confront problems of the public, public communication, public opinion, public discourse, publicness, publicity, and public life in general from a variety of disciplinary and theoretical perspectives.

Javnost—The Public is published quarterly. The major part of each issue is devoted to specific themes, and the remainder of the issue is reserved for manuscripts centred on general topics of the journal. Recent and forthcoming theme issues of Javnost—The Public discuss: separation of powers and the media, communication beyond the nation-state, broadcasting after communism, access to the media, virtual democracy, new paths of journalism, and with contributions by Farrel Corcoran, Peter Bruck, Andrew Calabrese, Richard Collins, Peter Dahlgren, Sakae Ishikawa, Karol Jakubowicz, Nikhil Sinha, Michael Tracey, and Ruth Teer-Tomaselli discussing the prospects and controversies of public broadcasting in Eastern and Western Europe, North America, South Africa, India, and Japan.
