It was pointed out that the big protonsynchrotron for the laboratory which was to be established at Geneva would embody a new principle. After the visit by a study group to the United States, it was now intended to concentrate on a machine, much larger than was originally contemplated, of 30,000m. electro volts.

Results of research work in the laboratory would be made available to every country that asked for them. The institution would serve scientific purposes only.

The Swiss Government has ordered two American Patton M.47 medium tanks. They are to be tried out during the winter.

Lack of display place for the increasing number of exhibitors at the annual Swiss Industries Fair at Basle has led to plans for the construction of additional buildings in time for the 1953 Fair, to be held from April 11 to 21. Exhibitors at this year's Fair numbered more than 2,000, a slight increase over 1951.

Pursuing a series of experiments in Alpine landings for aircraft engaged in rescue work and the distribution of foodstuffs, a Swiss airman, Mr. Geiger, has flown with one passenger in a small aircraft from Sion, (Ct. Valais). The first landing took place successfully on the Testa Grigia, at the Swiss-Italian border above the Théodule Pass (10,900ft.), east of the Matterhorn. After taking off from a snowfield, Geiger made another landing near Gandegg Hut (10,005ft.) and a third at Zermatt (5,315ft.).

An 1,100lb bomb, the largest ever exploded in Switzerland, was set off at Kandersteg as part of an experiment to test air-raid shelters.

Dr. Hjalmar Schacht, one-time president of the German Reichsbank and current adviser of numerous governments in the more turbulent parts of the world, has conclusively demonstrated to the Swiss that whatever he may have lost during and since World War II, he retains his talent for rubbing people the wrong way.

Dr. Schacht is not welcome in Switzerland. He was forbidden to enter the country in 1945 and this ban has never been rescinded.

Knowing all this, Dr. Schacht took a plane from Cairo recently that stopped over in Geneva at the time when an overnight stay here was necessary before a connection could be had for Germany.

Instead of letting Dr. Schacht sit up all night in the customs precinct at Cointrin Airport, a policeman met him and told him he could stay in a hotel.

Dr. Schacht did not like this. According to Swiss accounts of the incident, he complained that there were no connections for Germany. He complained about the customs. He complained about everything so long that the regular airport bus was delayed on his account.

Finally the policeman offered to drive the financier into town. Once in the car, Dr. Schacht started complaining about the Swiss.

None of this would have been aired by the Swiss had not Dr. Schacht upon arriving in Frankfurt taken it upon himself to "request" an airline official to ask the Swiss Government not to provide him with a "police escort" on the occasion of his next visit — a statement that was, of course promptly relayed back to Switzerland and that stung Swiss police into giving their version of the incident.

Mr. Butler, Chancellor of the Exchequer, announces in a Parliamentary written reply that the basic travel allowance for the year beginning November 1, 1952, will remain at £25. The Allowance for children will remain at £15, but the adult allowance will now be given to children of 12 or over, instead of 15 or over, on the ground that many Continental hotels charge adult rates for older children.

In another reply Mr. Butler states that the amounts of exchange allowed to business travellers are under review.

During the first half of 1952 Switzerland imported 19,570 motorcars — Germany being the principal supplier. Great Britain came second on the list, the United States third and France fourth. Britain's contribution was 3,500 cars compared with 8,300 from Germany.

Swiss ice hockey championships start next month. The National Ice Hockey League has announced that they are to begin on November 27th and end on February 22nd. The calendar of the national Swiss team opens with two matches against Germany — one at Lausanne on November 21st, and the other on November 23rd at Bâle. On December 5th and 7th Stockholm will be the scene of matches between Switzerland and Sweden. Switzerland will be opposed by the Wembley Lions at Zurich and Bâle on January 9 and 11. Return matches against Germany will be held on February 28 and March 1 and will help as training matches for the world championships which are to take place at Zurich and Bâle between March 5 and 15. Switzerland will make a big effort to walk off with this important championship, and to help the Swiss players the League has signed a two-year contract with Canadian trainer Frank Sullivan, who coached the Edmonton Mercury, world champions in 1951.
