By order of the Swiss Military Department a military court is to inquire into the case known as the "massacre of horses of Thun," in which it is alleged that there has been wanton slaughtering of cavalry horses.

In 1950, at the time of the motorization of Swiss cavalry units, it was decided to wind up gradually the federal remount dépôt at Thun, while the federal remount dépôt at Berne was to remain. The Berne remount dépôt was to have taken over the best horses of the Thun dépôt, but, through jealousy, it is alleged, hundreds of horses instead of being offered for sale to peasants were sold to butchers.

The horses thus slaughtered included, among others, Hummer, on which Captain Moser won the gold medal at the London Olympic Games in 1948, and several other holders of many medals in Swiss and Continental competitions. It is alleged that they were sold for 100 Swiss francs each, just for their meat value, while many amateur riders here would have paid four times as much.

According to the Swiss radio sheep breeding in Switzerland during the last few years has shown encouraging development. The stock of animals increased by 9,000 between 1947 and 1951, and now totals approximately 191,000 head, belonging to 25,000 owners. Herds yielded about 247,000 pounds of wool in 1950, and 261,700 pounds in 1951.

According to figures issued by the Federal Bureau of Statistics there were 180,000 motor cars in use in Switzerland at the end of June this year, compared with 160,000 in 1951. There were also 47,000 (as against 44,000) vans, lorries, etc., and 131,000 (as against 96,000) motor-cycles, making a grand total of 360,000 (as against 300,000) motor vehicles, without counting military transport and farm tractors. Last year Switzerland had one motor vehicle for every 16 inhabitants. This year the figure is one for every 13 inhabitants. In fact, if only people entitled to hold driving licences (18-year-olds and above) are taken into consideration, it is possible to say that one out of every 10 Swiss citizens is "motorised". The concentration of vehicles is highest in the Canton of Geneva, where there is one for every six inhabitants. From the beginning of 1946 to June this year — six-and-a-half-years — Switzerland bought from abroad 180,000 motor vehicles and nearly 110,000 motorcycles. These imports were worth a total of 1,200 mill. Sw. francs or roughly 100 mill. £.

HOME AFFAIRS.

by Dr. Max Nef.

Discussions regarding the reorganisation of the finances of the Confederation have for years past been permanently tabled on the Agenda. There have been however certain intermediary stages, that have brought transitory solutions, which on the other hand, in consequence of negative decisions taken by the sovereign people, only served the purpose of preventing a definite proposal being put forward.

At the present time we are living under the régime of a Transitory Order, which was approved by the people and the Cantons in 1950, and which supplements the Constitutional Order of previous peacetimes. However, this Order also has already shown that it was not able to assure the necessary means for the Confederation. There still lack some 200 million francs per year, due partly to the supplementary armanent measures, for which — as will be recalled the proposals put forward for their financing were rejected by Popular Referendum on the 6th July.

The existing Finance Order is temporarily restricted in respect of its most essential parts, and this up to the end of 1954. Should the discussions in the Federal Chambers and the subsequent Popular Referendum on the new text of the Constitution be brought to a satisfactory conclusion early enough for the laws for its execution to come into force prior to the termination of the present Transitory Order, then the time is already ripe to begin with the preliminary work. The Federal Department of Finance has already elaborated various preliminary questions, which have been submitted during the last few days to a small group of members of Parliament, belonging to the big Parties. From these first deliberations, it would appear that there exists a certain willingness to leave to the Confederation, in the future also, the present extraordinary sources of revenue such as the Military Tax and the Turnover Tax. On the other hand, it is demanded by those circles which represent the principle of the freest possible economy, that every imaginable means of restricting expenditure should be examined by the Government and then put into effective practice.

Among the flexible expenditure of the Confederation, there stands in the foreground, as one of the biggest items for disbursement, the money allocated in subsidies. Representing, as they do, one fourth of total expenditure, these subsidies come second, after military expenditure, on the country's Budget list. They comprise, inter alia, the Confederation's contribution to the Old Age Pension and survivors' Insurance and certain sums appropriated for keeping down cost of living.

The remainder, the so-called current subsidies, the amount of which is not legally established in all cases, and in respect of which it would be easiest to effect reductions, are utilised for various purposes. Chief among them is the promotion and the support given to agriculture, including the provisioning of the country with cereals; in this particular case, it must be admitted that in the long run, the consumer is also a beneficiary from the effects of these subsidies on the part of the Government. The second biggest group is formed by contributions in respect of transport, followed by grants for social purposes. Subsidies having cultural aims are on a more modest scale, and to these can be added other allocations for various individual purposes.

Expenditure in regard to agriculture and to transport has risen considerably since the end of the war. This is largely due to increased mechanisation, so that for the last two years half the revenue obtained from Customs duties on imported petrol has been allocated to the Cantons for various purposes connected with traffic. In regard to subsidies for agriculture, it is difficult to think of any reversion, in view of the fact that the new Law on Agriculture will come into force next year, bringing with it fresh burdens for the State.

Social welfare measures also play their share in the increase in Federal expenditure for subsidies. Should tuberculosis insurance and maternity insurance be expanded, as has been intended for a long time past, this will also add to the expenditure for subsidies.

As regards State grants for cultural aims, one is almost tempted to wish that they could be made to flow in a more generous manner as a counter-poise to appropriations for material purposes.

Experience has shown that it is very difficult to carry out cuts in regard to subsidies. Attempts have already been made to achieve this by means of general reductions of equal percentual amounts, a stereotyped measure, which no longer took into account any individual particularities. In order to meet the demands of the Cantons, Communes and individual groups of beneficiaries, it is necessary for Parliament to exercise a methodical financial policy and a strong determination for resistance, within the latitude which it possesses in the matter of granting subsidies, when any noticeable savings are to be effected in this sphere of the Confederation's expenditure. So far, however, one is apt to meet with more of a tendency towards spending on the part of individual members of Parliament, as also on that of certain parties, which has helped to contribute to the steady increase in this particular form of expenditure.

Reduction in expenditure for subsidies will be certainly one of the most difficult problems to be solved within the framework of the Finance Reform. Nevertheless, it must be solved.
