Switzerland had an ocean-going merchant fleet of 31 ships, totalling 165,000 tons, at the end of last year, according to the annual report of the Swiss Political Department. During the year, four vessels aggregating 33,600 tons, were sold.

Of the 702 seaman in Swiss vessels, 287 were Swiss, or 40 per cent, compared with only 7 per cent in 1947. The increase is primarily due to the development and improvement in the training facilities for Swiss seaman. There is still a shortage of trained officers.

The Swiss Air Guard and Swiss Air Office have organized a practice rescue, which took place on the Zaufeuon glacier, on the Diablerets mountain, where an airliner was assumed to have crashed at a height of 9,000 ft.

Three aircraft dropped rescue equipment, medical supplies, foodstuffs, and five parachutists, who had been trained in Britain two years ago, at the appointed place three-quarters of an hour after the supposed accident. The parachutists were joined by half a dozen Alpine guides, who had to walk for four and a half hours to reach the place. The rescuers spent the night in a tent on the glacier, and the next day the aircraft of the air guard came to collect the men and the equipment and transported them to the nearest air landing ground.

Apart from the withdrawal of the yellow first class tickets and the cancellation of the fares in the respective tariffs, no further changes in the fare structure are contemplated.

Yodelling.

Genuine yodelling, as heard in the mountains of Switzerland, has very little in common with the yodelling songs sung by some of the popular singers of today or "hotted up" by certain jazz bands. In its most recent number "Costumes and Customs", the periodical put out by the National Federation of Swiss Costumes, gives some very interesting information concerning the origin of this custom: "Old texts, the Acta sanctorum, mention the song of the shepherds as long ago as 397. Julian the Apostate, Emperor of Rome from 361 to 363, alludes in his Misopogon to the songs of the Barbarians living along the banks of the Rhine as being "high-pitched like those of birds". We have it from reliable sources that at the end of the Middle Ages there were hundreds of different yodels in the various different parts of Switzerland. They enabled the uncommunicative mountaineers to give vent to their feelings; the song was a form of release.

Although originating in lonely places, it was soon heard at public gatherings, at village and mountain feasts, fairs and wrestling matches or in the celebrated "bénichons" (traditional autumn festivals held in the Canton of Fribourg). Then it was sung in unison, the leader intoning the melody, which was taken up by the chorus. The theme, thus learnt in common, was then taken back to the chalets, the workshops, the cow-sheds and the fields. Paul Budry, author of "La Suisse qui chante", added that "yodellers in music halls usually give quite a wrong idea of how it should be done, sweetening and sentimentalizing it, whereas in actual fact the yodel is virile, sharp, caustic and aggressive like the temperaments high up in the mountains, where love is a challenge, where friendships are forged in a wrestling match fought stripped to the waist on the grass and the joy of living is expressed in uproarious drinking matches. There are different types of yodelling, ranging from what might be called the "hot yodel", a form of pure improvisation and vocal acrobatics, to the yodelled song for four voices. Löbe, Leckler Chüedreckler, Ruggnuser each have their own rules and liberties. There is the competition yodel sung in turn by a group of people round a table, the group yodel, the thaler yodel that has to be held as long as a coin spins on a plate, the danced yodel and the "ranz des vaches", a Swiss cowherd's melody interspersed with calls and shouts that the cows seem to understand very well.

How does a Swiss household spend its money?

Since 1943, the Federal Office for Industry, the Arts and Crafts and Labour (OFIANT) has been closely following the changes taking place in family budgets. Bread plays a progressively smaller part in the budget of the average Swiss household. Milk and milk products represent almost a quarter of all expenditure on food. Fruit accounts for a fifth, and meat and fish for another fifth.

Today workers' families spend less on drink and tobacco than before the war (a drop from 3.6% to 2.7%). In the families of office workers, the same tendency is noted although it is not so marked. The manual worker's family on the other hand spends more on clothing, devoting 9.5% of its total expenditure, instead of 9% just before the war. With office workers the figure is also 9.5%.

The biggest change seems to have taken place in the field of rents, with regard to both manual and office workers. Before the war, rents accounted for more than 17% of total expenditure in both categories of Swiss wage-earners. Now it amounts to only 12.6% for the manual worker and 13.1% for the office worker. The reduction in the proportion spent on rent has made it possible to increase other items of expenditure. Both office and manual workers have spent more money on furnishing their homes, looking after their health, on education, entertainment, transport, travel and insurance.

Very great changes have occurred too in the field of insurance, entertainment and transport. Nowadays, office workers set aside 11.7% of their expenditure for insurances, and manual workers 11.3%. Before the war, neither of these figures came to more than 10%. In both classes of wage-earners again, transport and travel account for 3.2% of the family budget. Previously, they did not even amount to as much as 2% for the manual workers. It is significant that both manual and office workers take advantage of the improved conditions to give themselves better protection against the hazards of life.

A Century of Swiss Railways.

In 1947 the Federal Transport Office in Berne, in collaboration with Swiss Federal Railways and numerous experts, began the task of producing a comprehensive commemorative work on the evolution of Swiss Railways during the first hundred years of their existence, entitled "A Century of Swiss Railways (1847-1947)" (Vol. 4 — published by Delachaux and Niestlé)*. The first volume was devoted to a general introduction and the history, finances, statistics and personnel of the Swiss Railways. The second volume dealt with permanent ways and fixed installations for normal and narrow-gauge tracks. Rolling stock formed the subject of the third volume. The fourth volume, which has just come out, deals with Administration, organisation and traffic. The directors of publication, Maurice Paschoud and René Thiessing, have taken the evolution of railways during the last few years into account and the work has been brought up to date as far as 1954. Numerous illustrations add to the interest of this work which is a veritable compendium of Swiss railway lore.
