ACCIDENTS

On 24th June, at nearly 2 p.m., two km. away from Sion, there was a serious collision between a freight express train coming from Brigue and a special train carrying about 300 members of the Agricultural Society Reiden (Lucerne). The two locomotives were completely destroyed, and two carriages of the special train were thrown down an incline, with one of the engines coming to rest on top of them. Twelve people were killed and 103 injured; 27 of these had to be taken to hospital. As there was a danger of explosion, the wrecked carriages had to be cleared by hand, which meant a long wait for some of the injured who were trapped. The two drivers were both killed, one was a father of five small children from Brigue, the other a young man from Renens.

Ten victims came from Pfaffnau (Lucerne), and they included three married couples who leave behind several small children. Special measures have been taken to help the bereaved families, and arrangements have been made to continue work on the farms.

Messages of condolence have arrived from all over the country. The Federal Council and the two Chambers in session in Berne expressed their sympathy. In the Council of States, relief was felt when the President announced that Vice-President Clavadetscher would have been on the train if his duties had not held him back in Berne.

On Friday, 28th June, the ten victims were buried at Pfaffnau. All the Lucerne National Councillors and Councillors of States were present at the funeral service which was also attended by personalities from the SBB and political delegations from the Valais. Bishop Dr. Anton Haenggi officiated. Some 3,000 people attended the service.

The accident has been the worst since 1948 when 21 people lost their lives in a train catastrophe near Waedenswil. In the period since then, six travellers only died in collisions and derailments. In the same time, the Swiss Federal Railways have transported over 4 milliard travellers.

The first accident on Switzerland's Federal Railways happened in 1871 at Colombier, when 24 people were killed. The very worst ever occurred on 14th June 1891 near Muenchenstein where the Birs bridge collapsed under the weight of the train; 71 travellers lost their lives, and 171 were injured.

Two days after the accident near Sion, three people were killed when a private aircraft (Piper-Cherokee) crashed on the Big Aletsch Glacier. On the same day, the main hall of the Union Bank of Switzerland in Basle was gutted by fire. Nobody was harmed, but damage is expected to surpass the million-franc mark.
