UNTIL NOW QUARTZ WATCHES HAD ONE THING IN COMMON.

AFTER A YEAR THEY STOPPED.

It's true.

Ordinary quartz watches, though they boast amazing accuracy, will only run for a maximum of twelve months before they need a new battery.

But now Tissot—backed by over a century of distinguished watchmaking—have created a quartz watch that combines accuracy and endurance.

They call it "The Thousand Day Watch"

Keep on running!

Thanks to advanced circuitry design, the new Tissot Quartz will keep on running for up to three years on one normal battery.

So, before you return to your jeweller for a new power unit, you'll have over a thousand days in which to contemplate all the other fine qualities that have gone into your Tissot. Like its classic, masculine looks and—above all—its phenomenal quartz accuracy.

Ask your jeweller to show you the new Tissot "Thousand Day Watch" range, which starts at £59.50.

Where ordinary quartz watches stop, the new Tissots just keep on running.
