Integration through Subordination

The Politics of Agricultural Modernisation in Industrial Europe

edited by Peter Moser & Tony Varley

Rural History in Europe
8

BREPOLS

Starting from the hypothesis that states were crucial as agents of modernisation, this book explores why, how and with what results European states have striven to transform their agricultural sectors in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries. Modernising agriculture has increasingly meant emulating the new organisational models of manufacturing industry. But since agriculture continues to rely heavily on living resources (plants and animals), the results of modernising farming have often differed significantly from the manufacturing sector. Modernised agriculture, in other words, is something quite different than simply industrialised agriculture.

With contributions from Austria, Belgium, Germany, Great Britain, Greece, Hungary, Italy, Ireland, Netherlands, Portugal, Spain and Switzerland
