270°C Colder

thethirdeye.agency

Around 11 months ago, I moved into a small house at the northern edge of the city. My roommates are different kinds of spiders, cockroaches, mosquitoes and some other foreign creatures whose names I do not know. Actually, I am a foreigner myself.

In principle, we share all the space in this house. But it seems like every creature has their own addiction to certain kinds of space: Spiders like corners, cockroaches like somewhere with foods, mosquitos like me...

The form of the small environment in my house reminds me of a model for a social structure and its corresponding space and time. At the ETH on Hönggerberg, space and time are also shared by different human beings with different social identities: At around 05:30 in the morning, the staff of the logistics center of ETH is receiving mails and packages from the Post, and at the same time the cooks of two canteens start to prepare the meals of the day; the cleaners from vebego Schweiz Holding AG must arrive at around 6:00 and some of them finish their work at around 8:00 on working days. Most of them are recent immigrants, the time when they finish their work should be the time when the «professors», «students», «researchers», «assistants» just begin theirs. At around 19:00, maybe most of these decent identities are leaving their working place, heading for another space called home; at around 20:00 the staff from the post office comes to empty the postal box; from 22:15 the Sicherheitsdienst of the night shift start checking if all the space is in a state called safe; if it is summer, after midnight, crickets start chirping for courtship at the parking lot of the A floor in HIL.

I cannot remember since when, it seems that everyone and everything has a schedule, but some of the schedules stand on the edge of the prevailing reality. We sense each other over invisible boundaries and pretend to be stable in the turbulence of desire and fear.

It is so cold, but where could we go, the average temperature of the universe is even 270°C colder.

~ 06:15
The chauffeurs from transport and the staffs of logistics center in ONA were sorting out the packages and letters together. It was the busiest moment at logistics. Much energy and sweat, much noise and laughter.

~ 07:00
Transport was leaving logistics and the left empty space in logistics center.

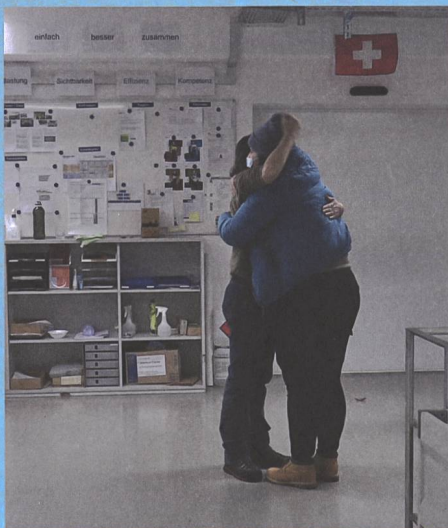

~ 07:10
Adrien was driving to deliver mails and packages, we encountered with the worker from the construction site on Höggerberg.

~ 10:00
The shelf for sorting the ETH internal letters: The left side is for ETH Center; the right side is for Höggerberg.

~14:30
The logistics is usually off work. It was Isabella's final day at logistics, besides a bouquet of flowers she received many good wishes and love from the team.

~13:00
Hasan was franking letters, which had been collected by the chauffeurs from different building of ETH. Besides the job at logistics, he is also a musician playing lute, and studied Arabic literature in Syria.

06:21
The toilet has been cleaned once. All the toilets need to be cleaned twice every day.
